Introduction

This bibliography should not be regarded as a complete coverage of the field it is supposed to include. Neither in the subject matter nor in the countries covered it will prove to be comprehensive. Some countries for which only very few items could be found have not been mentioned at all.

The newly established Unesco Research Centre had neither enough time nor personnel to complete this bibliography fully satisfactorily before the present Seminar. The purpose of this provisional edition is, therefore, to invite those who are interested in any of the many aspects of urbanization in Asia, particularly as far as the ECAFE region in Asia is concerned, to give their suggestions for the improvement of the present bibliography in order to enable us to publish later on a more comprehensive edition. However, this bibliography, even in its final edition, will necessarily be a selective bibliography, as it is tried to include only works of remaining interest, discarding, in general, articles in newspapers or weeklies. But even so there will be difficulties. It is not easy to decide which titles should be included and which not. Urbanization is such a wide field and the subjects connected with it, directly or indirectly, are so numerous that it is hardly possible to exclude any subject altogether. Nevertheless, if this bibliography would be too comprehensive, it would miss its purpose of being a special bibliography. It was necessary, therefore, to draw the line somewhere, and it was decided not to include items which would have only an indirect bearing on urbanization. For instance, subjects like land reforms have been excluded, although land reforms may have an important influence on the rural economy and so, indirectly, on the urban economy and social structure as well.

Publications covering general problems of urbanization have also been omitted, unless some special reference was made to the Asian situation.

Another important limitation is that the present list only includes works in English. This is certainly a shortcoming which may be remedied, perhaps, in the final edition, but for the present purpose, namely, to give an idea of the literature on urbanization in Asia to the participants in this Seminar who nearly all have English at least as their second language, it seemed sufficient to limit this bibliography to works in English only. This has caused a severe restriction on the entries of those countries, like Indonesia, where English was not the traditional scientific language. It will be helpful to receive suggestions from the participants in this Seminar as to how to overcome this difficulty, for it is clear that when works in other languages than English will be included, the technical difficulties will grow considerably.

The user will observe vast differences between the various countries as regards the number of entries. This ....

is not only to be ascribed to better bibliographical research in respect of some countries, but also to the natural differences in the number of works produced. However, the fact that this bibliography was mainly produced in India may be partly responsible, at least, for the large number of titles of works on this country. It has been attempted to lessen this difference in treatment somewhat by asking for help in some countries which could not easily be covered from Calcutta. In this context it is appropriate to convey the Centre's most sincere thanks to Prof. Gabriel A. Bernardo, Librarian of the Library of the University of the Philippines and Professor of Library Science, and to his co-workers who have been good enough to prepare the complete part covering the Philippines. We are most grateful for this very important assistance which was gracefully rendered by Prof. Bernardo.

This bibliography is largely a compilation of existing works. This will also explain the differences in presentation. Not all our sources gave the number of pages or even the year of publication, and this is reflected in the present list. The main sources were the following: United Nation's Bibliography, Miss Smith's Bibliography on Technological change and social disorganization, Philippines' Annotated Bibliography of Nutrition and related topics, and Ghani's Pakistan, A Selected Bibliography.

We should like to thank the authors of these works for their important contributions. The annotated items taken over from Miss Smith's bibliography have been indicated by placing an asterisk before the entry. Finally, it should be explained that the classification within each country into the various headings has largely followed the example of the U.N. bibliography, although the present classification has probably given a little more emphasis to economic issues.

Only in the case of the Philippines the classification is somewhat different, as no substantial changes have been made in this part, excepting the omission of a rather large number of articles published in newspapers and weeklies for the reason mentioned above. However, a number of laws have also been deleted, namely, those which only amended laws already entered unless the amendment served to alter the law fundamentally. In a number of cases only one out of a large number of laws was entered if the other laws seemed to be repetitions only, e.g., only one example of a law changing the name of a street was retained.

Moreover, in the bibliography of the Philippines one will find a good number of University theses. Strictly speaking, these are no publications. However, as exactly those theses give an account of the scientific work carried out in connection with problems of urbanization, they were thought to be a useful addition. In the final edition of this bibliography it is hoped that theses produced in other countries will also be included. Again, the assistance of the participants in this Seminar and of the Universities will be essential to achieve this purpose.

Finally, a difficulty arose as regards the classification according to countries. In general, items referring to the situation in Southeast Asia have been placed under O. Asia. This was also done when a publication referred to more than one country of Asia. A special case was provided by India and Pakistan. To avoid a large number of double entries it was decided to place all the publications dealing with the subcontinent before partition (1947) under India, whereas they were placed under Pakistan if it was clear that they particularly referred to cities now situated in Pakistan. Each country has been given a number and the numbering of entries had been done per country according to that number, whereas the pages have been numbered separately for each country.

It should again be stated that this list is provisional only, and that any additional titles as well as suggestions for improvement will be most welcome.

The Unesco Research Centre is most grateful to the ECAFE office for having produced this bibliography the stencils of which had been cut at the Centre's office.

The section on Burma (p. 43-77) contains data on the influence of technological change, including reference to the individual.

p. 53-54 "The early writers on Burma had been impressed by the 'orderly habits of the people', the relative absence of crime and rarity of litigation. The tremendous growth of crime in Burma since then ... began before the colonization of the Delta - with the accompanying displacement of population - had assumed large proportions." Relates the "spectacular rise of crime and litigation" to the cultural conflict engendered by the introduction of a foreign legal code.

Examines suicide and homicide statistics for 1946, compares them with those for Western countries and analyses figures for six separate Sinhalese groups. Finds that suicide rates are low (7.8 per 100,000 for males and 3.7 for females) but that homicide rates are among the highest known (9.7 per 100,000 for males and 2.1 for females). Also gives rates for Ceylon from 1880 to 1950 suggesting several factors in Westernization which have probably affected them. Suggests that the suicide rate will vary directly, and the homicide rate inversely, with the degree to which a society is closely structured.

"The impact of Western culture and the rise of industrialism in India have brought about far-reaching social changes which have profoundly affected both the character of our family life and the position of women. In rural areas, where the old economy still prevails, the family is not only the unit of consumption but also the unit of production. .... This new economic role of Indian women is a comparatively recent product of our changing civilization." Then gives statistics of the industrial and geographical distribution of women workers and hours; and gives an outline of relevant legislation.

3.157. MEHTA, (B.H.). The Villager in the City: a study of Rural-Urban Relationships. Indian Journal of Social Work, 1(3), 1940: 380-392.

Villagers have been drawn to industrial areas in search of higher wages. They leave a closely-knit and relatively stable village community for the impersonal life of the cities - and the old urban life of India is itself changing under the impact of industrialization. The villager's health deteriorates. Religious beliefs become purely formal, and communal ties (Hindu-Moslem) tend to replace them. Most of the married men leave their wives at home and this creates sexual problems. Many of them eventually return once again to the country.

3.161. NATARAJAN, (S.). Social Problems. Bombay, Oxford University Press, Oxford Pamphlets on Indian Affairs, No.7, 1943.

The author suggests that in the past "social problems" have essentially been those raised by the task of reconciling three different cultures in India: Hindu, Moslem, and British. Quite new problems are being raised however by the shift of population into the towns and the consequent weakening of the existing village communities. In particular, this has weakened caste-divisions, the joint-family system, and has changed the status of women. In the towns, among the harmful consequences of industrialism have been spread of prostitution and the increase in the number of beggars. He suggests as remedies more widespread education and reforms in "central administration" to make it more "effective"; this, it is clear, is his plea for independence.

3.300. *KULKARNI, (A.) "Juvenile Delinquency." Indian Journal of Social work, Vol . 12, 1952: 450-454.
An address given at the Fifth Annual Session of the Indian Conference of Social Work, Calcutta, December 1951. Begins by saying juvenile delinquency has "become an important and anxious problem in India". Gives an extremely dark picture of
/for coping with problem. Children conditions in Bombay and of facilities/from the country are often arrested and repatriated, but they return to the city. Incidence has risen during last ten to twelve years and destitution has increased. Agrees with Bowlby that delinquents are generally incapable of affectionate relationships and believes that such children are more common in city than in countryside due to urban destruction of family.

3.301. * KULKARNI (D.V.) Children in need - a retrospect of laws. Indian Journal of Social Work, 2(4) 1951: 353-364.

Opens with short descriptions of the life lived by individuals among his 250 boys. Most of these boys come from the country to Bombay, the chief cause of their migration being the poverty of their parents, and the size of their families. But others include (a) organized contracting by hotel proprietors; (b) ill-treatment at home; (c) becoming orphans; (d) the small amount of skill needed to get work in the hotel trade. Describes their living and working conditions, and the social and physical effect of this work.

8.610. COLLADO, Esteban G., Are the Filipinos Undernourished? J.P.I.M.A., 1929, 9:43.

This is a rebuttal to Dr. A.B.M.Sison's assertion. The author clarifies his position, namely that while data on actual physical and other measurements generally conceded to be measures of nutritive state are still incomplete, what is already available considered in relation to the more expensive observations on the inferior quality of the diet, the prevalence of pulmonary tuberculosis, seems to justify the assertion that the Filipinos are undernourished.

8.611. COLLADO, Esteban G., "Development of Nutrition Work in the Philippines." Bull. Nat. Res. Council (Philippines), 1935, 5:503.

Nutrition work was reviewed under six categories: 1. Surveys on state of nutrition and metabolism of the people, - includes dietary surveys, nitrogen excretion and basal metabolism studies. 2. Proximate composition of Philippine foods and food-stuffs. 3. Relation of vitams to beriberi, - studies to elucidate etiology of beriberi cited. 4. Vitamin and mineral contents of Philippine foodstuffs. 5. Food preparation and preservation. 6. Dissemination of knowledge through various govdrnment agencies.

8.612. COLLADO, Esteban G., "Food Intake of Filipino College Students." J.P.I.M.A., 1936, 16:155.

Daily food intake in 12 dormitories around the U. P. campus is summarized :-

8-612 (contd.)

	Total Calories	Protein Gm.	CA Gm.	P Gm.	Fe Gm.	Cost per capita
Male	2311	82	0.51	1.56	0.22	0.34
Female	2114	76	0.48	1.55	0.23	0.35

The food intake is adequate quantitatively except for the low Ca content. Suggestions are made to change the distribution of expenses to provide more Ca and the "protective" foods.

Malnutrition is defined and methods of detecting it are described. Statistics are presented to show the prevalcne of diseases attributable to dietary deficiencies. Direct financial public assistance to very needy cases and a program of mass education are suggested as remedy in addition to a broad statement of an increased food production and better marketing.

Pressing medical and public health problems are presented such as general malnutrition, tuberculosis, beri-beri, mother-infant nutrition, and dental caries. The dietary and nutritional approach is discussed from two broad aspects:-

(1) general,- covering dissemination of nutrition information to the layman; intensification of good production, and social amelioration; and

(2) nationalization of the rice-enrichment project of the Institute of Nutrition.

Analysis of causes of malnutrition: ignorance, insufficient food supply, lag in development of services.

Evidences of malnutrition: high morality from beri-beri, high incidence of anemia, low level of nutrition.

Corrective measures suggested: (1) Immediate:- extension of rice enrichment program; supplementary feeding of vulnerable groups; nutrition clinics and consultant services. (2) Long range:- nutrition education and information, research, surveys, direction and guidance of food policies, cooperation among different agencies and with international organizations.
